FRIDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 5, 1858.

The Late Election—Some of the Causes which gave Douglas the Legislature. The battle has been fought, and victory, so far at least as the Legislature is concerned, is on the side of our political adversaries. That we are deeply, painfully disappointed, it is sortedy necessary to assure [our] readers. From the opening of the campaign up to the receipt of the disastrous intelligence from Sangamon and Tazewell Countles, on Tags.

the auticipated—weakened our faith in other districts on which we had relied with the same conditence that we had upon them. The causes—whatever they may have been—that wrought such fatal damage to the Republican ticket in those counties, we were apprehensive would carry disaster to it in Morgan and Scott, in Madison and Bond, in Jersey, Green and Maccoupin, in McDonough and Fulton, and in Schuyler and Hancock. Nevertheless we still clung to the hope—not very strong, we still clung to the hope—not very strong we have a carried the Legislature by a decided majority.

6 Another fact, and one, perhaps, which damaged the Republican party more than any other, was the attitude in which Mr. Douglas stood towards Mr. Crittenden, the Senate.

still clung to the hope—not very strong, we confers—that the appliances which had been brought to bear against us in the former counties could not be or had not been employed to the same extent in the latter. The result, however, proves that in this we were missiaken. Almost the whole portion of the with these gentlemen. They were in his mistaken. Almost the whole portion of the state recognized by the two parties as debateable ground has gone against us. The majordiles, it is true, are not large, but they are just as effectual as though they were ten times as great.

We are not yet in possession of full inforsecured the sympathy of these leading men who were connected politically with the two parties in his own State from which he exwho were connected politically with the two parties in his own State from which be expected to recruit his forces in bis struggle for re-election, and their sympathy he has undoubtedly maintained, if not their active cooperation, throughout the canvass. Add to this the letter from Mr. Crittenden, expressive the state of the struggle and which have operated against is with damaging effect throughout the whole can-vas. We propose briefly adverting to some of the most prominent of them.

of the Democratic party in the control of his friends, and, with very few dissentionts, the 7. And finally, the only vital issue connected with the present—the Dred Scott decision—which the Republicans were able to make, Mr. Douglas succeeded in entirely evading. He treated it as a mere abstraction, of no practical interest, and laid down a rule by which the people of the Territories may nullify and abrogate at pleasure a provision of the Federal Constitution. The people are not learned in Constitutional law, and therefore, by the nee of this most unstatesmanike.

Whether Mr. Douglas has a majority of all votes cast in this State on Tuesday, is atill an open question. Possibly the light rote in the northern counties where there was no contest for members of the Legisla-ture, has left him at least an apparent popucountry and posterity, a war against pro-slavery Democracy, here and where, to be terminated only with not for the last. The seed of Reted in this great contest mus and ripen into its proper fruit; if not long as life, liberty and the pursuit of princes are left us, the Republican party is isted with all its energies for the battle of Right against the Wrong—and what reto be done when we have ceased to be, hall bequeath fervently to our children. his is the spirit which animates Republicans com Maine to Oregon. for this work. Of all the mills that we have seen, however, very few were made with sufficient strength to stand the immense strain to which they are subjected. In another year when the requirements of a successful cane mill are properly understood the disadvantages labored under the present assuon will be removed. The best mills we have in this county are of a Chicago make, though we have mills from St. Louis and Cincianati. Having obtained the juice by expression the whole secret in making augar seems to lie in a proper clarification. Repeated strainings to remove anything which might settle on the bottom of the boilers and produce a liability to scorch, or which might aid is giving a dark color to the syrup, are very important. The neutralization of vegetable acids by the proper admirture of lime and the remoreturns to the stockholders.

The cames that have sed to these steps are set forth in Mr. Jones' letter to the stockholders, which we find published in the Maquekets programmer. Mr. Jones recites at some length his efforts to procure the grant of public lands from Congress to sid in building the road, and the successive resolutions of the Board of Directors indorsing and sustaining him. He commenced his efforts before Congress in 1856, and struggled for nearly four years before obtaining what he saked, but was finally successful.

It became necessary to pledge some portion of the grant to the lobby, to enable him to get it through Congress, as the lows delegates were hostile to the bill. The amount originally promised to the lobby in the shape of land was afterwards compromised into $700,000 of the stock of the company, and so stands at this time. The Board of Directors conferred upon the President fall power to incur these obligations, and afterwards confirmed his acts, as the minutes of the Company show.

Very respectfully, S. S. Johns. The Sorgho Crop.

The discovery that a sugar producing plant akin to the sugar cane of the South ous be successfully enlitivated north of the Ohio, will, without doubt, prove one of the most important historical events of the past year. Besides the interest we feel in it as a new source of wealth, who can tell the influence it may have in the ultimate extinction of Slavery in the United States. The confidence in a revolution in the sugar trade is irresistible, on seeing the very large amount of sorgho already, raised in lithrois and the adjoining States. The experisence sequired the present season in the culture of the cane and manufacture of the product will be very extensive, and will answer fully every doubt that has existed or may yet exist on the subject. In nine cases out of ten our farners are well satisfied at least of the profus of the crop, so there is no drawback to the full development of the enterprise. From reliable data if may easily be shown that 60,307 acres will yield sufficient molasses to supply the State, patting the demand at a high flygre. Assuming that another 150,000 acres will farnish us with sugar, we shall require but one acre in the subject. Dragoon Charge on the Indians.

The dragoon charge at the battle of "Four Lakes," Oregon, is thus described:

This was the chance for which the dragoons had been impatiently waiting—when they could reach the enemy upon the plains. They rode through the company intervals of the artillery and infantry. Major Grier thundered out the order to charge, and across the plain they dashed upon them. This completed the rout, and the Indians at once broke for the hills and thickets, with the dragoons dashing in their rear. On they went, riding over them and cutting them dewn. Yells, and uplifted hands, and shrieks for mercy, were unheeded; for both Taylor's and Gaston's companies were there burning to avenge their fall. And so they followed them on till they reached the steep hill side, where the fleet horses of the Indians enabled them entirely to make good their escape. From the pines by the lakes, and the glens and open plain, a stream of flying warriors poured up the high hill and over its crest.

Had the dragoons been well-mounted, so as to reach the main body, the shughter would have been great. But their horses were perfectly worn out. They had just ended a march of twenty-eight days, under the saddle all day, with constant scouting, picketed by night, and only a little grass in the evening after camping. So they were thoroughly blown, and obliged to halt on the hill side, before reaching the mass of the enemy.

Some of Mr. Carlyle's renders have been heard to make of his writings the complaint which he makes of Coleridge's talk, that, with all its fervor and eloquence, "What you are to believe or do on any earthly or heavenly thing, obstinately refuses to appear from it." However true this may be of his writings in general, he has proclaimed in very unequivocal terms his belief in the Calvinistic doctrine of predestinarians in the folthese to appear from it." However true this may be of his writings in general, he has proclaimed in very unequivocal terms his belief in the Calvinista doctrine of predestinarianism in the following paragraph, which occurs in the second volume of his "Life of Frederick the Great," just published in London. He is stating a theological heresy into which young Frits had fallen;

"His majority understands, on credible information, that beserter Fritz entertains very heterodox opinions—opinions on predestination for one, which is itself calculated to be the very mother of mischlef in a young mind in limited to evil. The heresy about predestination, or the 'Frie Gindenwall (Election by Free Grace,') as his Majesty lerms it, according to which a man is pre appointed room all eternity either to salvation or the opposite, (which is Fritz's notion, and, indeed, is Calvin's and that of many benighted creatures, this addice causes there is not would the whole synod gether as shocking; nor would the whole synod posite, (which is Fritz's notion, and, indeed, is Cai vin's and that of many benighted creatures, this editor cames them.) appears to his Majesty altogether as shocking; nor would the whole synod of Dort, or Calvin, or St. Augustin in person, reconcile his Majesty's practical judgment to such a tenet. What'f may not Deserter Fritz say to himself even now, or in whatever other depths of sin he may fall into, 'I was foredoomed to it; how could I, or how can I help it? The mind of his Majesty shuddens, as if looking over the edge of an abyas." You'll, ip, ET.

There has been a good deal in all Mr. Carlyle's writings about 't the fates, the destinies, and such branches of learning? (to quote from Lamnestot Gobbo); but to most of his readers, no doubt, such expressions were but 't old phrases," "branches of learning," strong squres of speech. Few understood, in the strict Calvinitio sense "that a min's good or ill conduct is foredoomed on him by decree of God." The significant parenthesis which asserts it is worth noting, as a matter of fact. To have a distinct opinion from Mr. Carlyle on matters on which he has hitherto been stuffonaly vague—pronouncing it not pleasant always to give an account of them.

Recent graphs have revisided that state. the cost of raising and preparing one acre of stalks for the mill to be equal to the cost of raising and cribbing one acre of corn. The difference, we think, will be very small either way. The corn, at average figures in this nart of the country, is worth $15. Now, from close observations, we have concluded that on a limited scale fifty galions of molasses may be made per day at an expense for labor, wear and tear of machinery, etc., of not over ten cents per gallon; 127 galions will then cost $13.70 for manifecturing. This molasses is now selling here at from fifty to seventy-five cents. Suppose at wholesale it brought only thirty-seven and a half cents, the acre would prounce $47.63\(\frac{1}{2}\), for manifecturing. Thus, even with our present imperfect knowledge of the art of sugar-making, it will be seen that we have made our crop profitable. Next year, improving on the expertise of his, we expect to do much better. As there we would auggest that it is the duty of every one to experiment to some extent and give the results to the public, should any important facts be elicited. It is in this way only that the art of manufacturing Sorgho Sugar can be perfected.

"Soldiers of Mexico! there are the emmiss of the Republic, and the enemies of the Church; this day we shall strike a blow that will gire rest to the Republic, and rebuild the altars of our holy religion." When these words were concluded, shouts from 5,00 voices of "Vira la Republica, Vira la Iglesia!" resounded in tones of the deepest enthusiam throughout the lines. As soon as silence was restored, the bugies sounded, and the army advanced with fixed beyonets and lance, orders having been given for not a masket to be fixed until the batteries should be taken. As the attacking army advanced, Vidsurri's gunners were distinctly seen holding in their hands their lighted port-fires, awaiting the orders of their commanders, but the army of Mexico steadily advanced. When within two hundred yards of Vidsurri's lines, the order to fire was given, and sixy pieces of cannon and eight thousand small arms beliched forth their murderous hail upon the assisiants. In an instant, and before the troops had time to waver, the order to charge rang down the line from the sharp voice of General Miramon; the order was obeyed—and before the artillerymen could retoud their pieces, a large portion of them were lanced at their guns, and the batteries were taken. Simultaneously Miramon's infantry had fallen upon Vidsurri's volontarios with their bayonets with such fury sawas irreistible. Lances and bayonets were desired with blood, while bullets pieced the fregitness figures. The deadliest crimes resulted from those secret sins, which, cheriabed unsuspected, might suddenly break out into the most flagrant atrocities, even among civilized and educated men. Mr. Smith spoke of young Gouldy as a victim to secret sin and indulgences. A master passion had gained courted over him, and doubtiess had made a madman of him. GENERAL INTELLIGENCE,

VALUE OF THE NEW FIRE-ARRS IN INDIAN WARFARE—The value of Sharpe's rife and the Minic bail in Indian warfare has been thoroughly demonstrated in the operations in Washington Territory. Col. Wright's command is the first one that has encountered the Indians with these modern weapons. Col. Steptoe had the old cavalry on any occasion, whatever damage their recold was in the habit of indicting on the unlocky troops who had to fire them. Col. Wright's command used the Sharper rife, and the difference in result is most striking. Says one account of the battle of Four Lakes: "We have killed and wounded more than torty-seven of the enemy, and not one of us hurt. I tell you the Indians were astonished when our fellows picked/them off at four and five bundred yards. They won't let a single man now approach them nearer than half at mile." The War Department has given unusual attention of late to the improvement of fire-arms, and especial pains base been taken to supply our forces in Washington Territory with the most effective of the various newly-invenied guas. This has been done not less to give the highest efficiency to cur troops on that distant theatre than totest by actual use and trial the relative value of the new wars. Wichster of Minister.

> A MARRIAGE TRAGEDY. BY WILKIE COLLINS.

Saying that, he took up a letter from the table and read it aloud. I had a copy of it given to me afterward, which I looked at often enough to fix the contents of the letter in my memory. I can now repeat them, I think, word for word.

"Madax" (it begin), "I can now repeat them, I think, word for word.

"Madax" (it begin), "I can now repeat them, I think, word for word.

"I won the seven disposed to regret his absence, do so no longer. Hope and pray, rather, that you and be may never meef face to face again in this world. I write in great hatte and in great fear of being observed. Time fails me to prepare you as you ought to be prepared for what I have now to disclose. I must tell you plainly, with much respect for you and sorrow for your misfortuse, that your husband has married another wife. I saw the ceremony performed, unknown to him. If I could not have spoken of it at all.

"I dare not asknowledge who I am, for I believe Mr. James Smith would attek at no crime to revenge himself on me if he ever came to a knowledge of the step I am now taking, and of the means by which I got my information. Neither have I time to enter into particulars. I simply ware you of what has happened, and leave you to act on that warning as you please. You may disbelieve this letter, because it is not signed by any name. In that case, if Mr. James Smith should ever venture into your presence, I recommend you to ask him suddenly what he has done with his new wife; and to see if his countenance does not immediately testify that the truth has been spoken by Poor as my opinion was of my master, I had never believed him to be capable of such half ashamed at my own boldness the moment after.

"You will do, my man," said the lawyer, nodding his head. "Don't trouble yourself about the cleverness or the cunning that may be wanted. My clerk has got head enough for two. I have only one word more to say before you go down stairs again. Remember that this investination and the cause that leads to it must be kept a profound secret. Except us three, and the elergyman here (to whom your mistress has written word of what has happened), nobody knows anything about it. I will let my clerk into the secret when he joins us. As soon as you and he are away from the house you may talk about it. Until then you will close your lips on the subject."

The clerk did not keep us long waiting. He came as fast as the mail from London could bring him. I had expected, from his master's bring him. I had expected, from his master's description, to see a serious, sedate man, ra ther sly in his looks and rather reserved in ther sly in his looks and rather reserved in his manner. To my amazement, this prac-ticed hand at delicate investigations was a brisk, plump, jolly little man, with a com-fortable double chin, a pair of very bright black eyes, and a big bottle nose of the true bonyivial red color. He wore a suit of black, black eyes, and a big bottle nose of the true convivial red color. He wore a suit of black, and a limp, dingy white cravat; took souff perpetually out of a very large box; walked with his hands crossed behind his back; and looked upon the whole, much more like a parson of free and easy habits than a law-yer's clerk. "How d'ye do ?" says he when I opened the door to him. "I'm the man you expect from the office in London. Just say Mr. Dark, will you? I'll sit down here till you come back; and I eay, young man, If there is such a thing as a glass of ale in the house, I don't mind committing myself so far as to say that I'll drink it."

I got him the ale before I announced him He winked at me before he put it to his lips. "Your good health," says he. "I like you. Don't forget that the name's Dark; and just leave the man and glass, will you, in case my master keeps me waiting."

I announced him at once, and was told to show him into the library. When I got back to the hall the jug was empty, and Mr. Dark was comforting himself with a pinch of snuff, snorting over it like a perfect grampus. He had swallo wed more than a pint of the strongest old ale in the bouse; and, for all the effect it seemed to have had on him, he might just as well have been drinking so much water.

As I led him along the passage to the liinight just as well have been drinking so much water.

As I led him along the passage to the library, Josephine, the French maid, passed us. Mr. Dark winked at me again, and made her a low bow. "Lady's maid," I heard him whisper to himself. "A fine woman to look at, but a d—d bad one to deal with." I turned round on him, rather angry at his cool ways, and looked hard at him, just before I opened the library door. Mr, Dark looked hard at me." "All right," says he. "I can show myself in." And he knocks at the door, and opens it, and goes in, with another wicked wink, all in a moment.

Half an hour later the bell rang for me. Mr. Dark was sitting between my mistress (who was looking at him in amazement), and the lawyer (who was looking at him with spproval). He had a map open on his knee, and a pen in his hand. Judging by his face, the communication of the secret about my master did not seem to have made the smallest impression on him.

"Lye got leave to sak you a question." rest. Mr. Dark, whom nothing ever fatigued, left me to take his toddy and pipe among the company in the tap-room.

I don't know how long I had been asleep, when I was roused by a shake on my shoulder. The room was pitch dark, and I felt a hand suddenly clapped over my mouth. Then a strong smell of whisky and tobacco saluted my nostrils, and a whisper stole into my car:

been Masleod.

Well, we put up at a modest little inn near the harbor. I was dead tired with the journey, and lay down on my bed to get some rest. Mr. Dark, whom nothing ever fatigued, my ear:

"William! we have got to the end of our

"Oh! Mr. Dark," I broke in, "don't tell master did not seem to have made the small-est impression on him.

"L've got leave to ask you a question," says he, the moment I appeared. "When you found your master's yacht gone, did you hear which way she had sailed? Was it northward toward Soojland?"

"Yes," I answered. "The boatmen told me that, when I made inquiries at the harbor,"

"Oh! Mr. Dark," I broke in, "don't tell me that the letter is true!"

"Every word of it," says he. He was married here, and he was off again to the Mediterranean with Number Two a good three weeks before we left your mistress' bouse. Hush! don't say a word. Go to sleep again, or strike a light and read, if you like it better. Do anything but come down stairs with me. I'm going to find out all the particulars without seeming to want to know one of them. Yours is a very good looking face, William, but it's so internally honest that I can't trust it in the tap-room. I'm making friends with the Scotchmen aiready. They know my opinion of Arthur's Seat; they ase what I think of whisky; and I rather think it wen't be long before they hear that my mother's maiden name was Macleod." me that, when I made inquiries at the harbor."

"Well, Sir." says Mr. Dark, turning to the lawyer, "if he said he was going to Sweden he seems to have started on the road to it, at all events. I think I have got my instructions now?"

The lawyer nodded and looked at my mistress, who bowed her head to him. He then said, turning to me.
"Pack nay your bag for teaveling, William, and have a conveyance got ready to go to the nearest post-town."
"And whatever happens in the future," added my mistress, her kind voice trembling a little, "believe, William, that I shall never forget this proof you now show of your devotion to me. It is still some comfort to know that I have your fidelity to depend on in this dreadful trial—your fidelity, and the extraor-REFINED SUGARS.—I AM RECEIVING from "United States Refiners." had occupied when he first arrived, and he had another jug of the old ale on the table by his 3 de.

"Got any fishing rods in the house?" says he, when I put my bag down in the hall.

"Yes," I replied, astonished at the question. "What do you want with them?"

"Pack a couple in cases for traveling," says Mr. Dark, "with lines and hooks and fly-hooks all complete. Have a drop of ale before you go—and don't stare William. I'll at the light in on you ar soon as we are out of the house. Off with you for the rods! I want to be on the road in five minutes."

When I came back with the rods and tackle, I found Mr. Dark in the dog-cart. "Money, luggage, fishing-rods, paper of directions, copy of anonymous letter, guide-book, map," says he, running over in his mind the things wanted for the journey. "All right so far. Drive off." I took the reins and started the horse. As we left the house, I saw my mistress and Josephine booking after us from two of the windows on the second floor. The memory of those two attentive faces—one so good, and the other so smiling and wicked—huusted my mind for many days after.

"Now, William," says sir. Dark, when we were clear of the lodge gates, "I'm going to begin by telling you what you are. You are a clerk in a bank; and I'm another. We have got our regular holiday, that comes, like Christmas, once a year; and we are taking a little tour in Scotland, to see the curiosities, and to breathe the sca air, and to get a little ishing whenever we can. Although the events that I am now relating happened many years ago, and although the persons principally affected by them are dead with the exception of myself and another, I shall still, for caution's sake, avoid mentionioning by name the various places visited by Mr. Dark and myself for the purpose of making inquiries. It will be enough if I describe generally what we fid, ann if I mention in substance only the result at which we ultimately arrived.

On reaching Glasgow, Mr. Dark altered his original intention of going straight to the north of Scotland, considering it safer to make sure, if possible, the course the yacht had taken in her cruise on the western coast. The carrying out of this resolution involved the necessity of delaying our enward journey by perpetually diverging from the direct route. Three times we were sent uselessly to wild places in the Hebrides by false reports. Twice we wandered away inland, following gentlemen who answered generally to the description of Mr. James Smith, but who turned out to be the wrong men as soon as we set eyes on them. These vain excursions—especially the three to the western islands—consumed time terribly. It was more than two months from the day when we had left Darrock Hall before we found ourselves up at the very top of Scotland at last, driving into a considerable sea-side town, with a harbor attached to it. Thus far our journey had led to no results, and I began to despair of our making any discoveries. As for Mr. Dark, he never got to the end of his temper and his patience. "You don't know how to wait, william," was his constant remark whenever he beard me complaining. "I do."

We drove into the town toward evening in a modest little gig, and put up, according to our usual custom, at one of the inferior inns. "We must begin at the bottom," Mr. Dark, he never got to the end of his temper and his patience. "You don't know how to wait, william," was his constant remark whenever the species of the last of tour sual custom, at one of the inferior inns. "We must D. Commercial and Money Matters.
Thismax Evento. Nov.4.

MONEY.—Eastern Exchange is plenty at I percent prem. Currency abundant for all business purposes, at the usual rates. Gold is in good demand at 1@1/se percent prem.

Commercial.—The America, with Liverpeel dates to the 23d ult. was telegraphed from Halifix this moraing. Breadstuffs reported steady—Provisions dull.

There was a lair attendance on 'Change to-day, and although the election continued to be diaconsed, there was more attention paid to business than during the past two days.

The Flour market continues dull; there being but faw ahippers offering to buy. Holders,

The Flour market continues dull; there being but faw ahippers offering to buy. Holders, however, are firm.

Wheat was more solive, and noder better advices from the East, the market advanced. Winter Wheat was firmly held, and the sales do not exceed 6,000 bushels at 99@1 01 for No. 1 Red. There was little or nothing done in No. 2 Red. Spring Wheat opened at 67c for No. 2 in store, but advanced in the afternoon to 70c, when buyers generally withdrew and the market closed weak—at 68@67c. Rejected wheat sold at 58c in store. The sales of Spring amount to about 50,000 bushels.

about 50,000 bushels.

The scarcity of Corn still continues, with a good demand. Buyers to secure parcels had to advance 5c on yesterday's figures. The sales do not exceed 4,000 bushels at 58c for Canal affect; 55@89c for No. 1 in store; and 58c for No. 2.

No. 2.

At St. Louis restorday the following sales of Provisions are quoted by the Evening News:—
Sales of 500 bbls Pork for March delivery on private terms, and 9,500 bbls prime Mess Beef, to be delivered at Reokuk, Quinoy and Hannibal, on private terms. We quote, nominally, Mess Perk, 415.50; eity Shoulders 6½c; eity Sides, rib n 8½c; do clear 2c; sngar cured Hams 19c. Sale yesterday of 500 canvassed Hams at 9½c. Mannfacturing Lard sells at 8 @9½c.

With regard to the Hog crop, the same paper says:—

The Hog crop comes nearer to being a monopoly to the Western States than any other great commodity of commerce. The Southern and the Eastern States can vie with the West in Wheat growing. Virginia shares the Tobacco trade with the West. But no part of the Eastern States. But no part of the Eastern States are South can grow Hogs to compete with the Corn lands of the Ohio, Mississippia and THE WEATHER—Cloudy, Wind S. W. Disasters.
